

Lisa Lazarus
Chief Executive Officer
Horseracing Integrity and Safety Authority

Lisa Lazarus is the chief executive officer of the Horseracing Integrity and Safety Authority (HISA), where she oversees the implementation of the Authority's Racetrack Safety Program and its Anti-Doping and Medication Control program.

Before joining HISA, Lazarus was a partner at Morgan Sports Law, where she founded and led the equestrian practice across a range of anti-doping, disciplinary, and regulatory disputes before the International Equestrian Federation (FEI) Tribunal, Court of Arbitration for Sport, and other governing bodies. Prior to her time at Morgan Sports Law, Lazarus served as chief of business development and strategy at the FEI, where she led its commercial activities, including broadcast and new media, sponsorship, licensing, and business development and prior to that as general counsel where she restructured and implemented the FEI's equine anti-doping program and oversaw all legal activities of the Federation.

Prior to focusing on equestrian sports, Lazarus spent 10 years with the National Football League (NFL), serving as Labor Relations Counsel from 1999 to 2005, during which time she represented the League's 32-member clubs on collective bargaining issues and in contested arbitrations. She also served as Senior Legal Counsel before taking the role of Senior Director of Partner Development for NFL International at the NFL's international headquarters in London, England.

Lazarus received her Doctor of Law (JD) degree from the Fordham University School of Law in New York in 1994 after graduating from the University of Pennsylvania.
